This book is the result of my personal experiences and a lot of work from other people, whom I would like to thank in this section.

People who know me are aware that I talk a lot. However, this is not enough to bring you on stage. My career as a speaker began and developed with the encouragement from my mentors.

Fabian Wickborn was my first mentor during my academic studies. He provided me with numerous opportunities such as helping to build a mentoring program for students, organizing workshops for student mentors and of course giving talks myself. Also, through these actions, he brought me in contact with people who proved to be very important for the mindset I've adopted over the years. Being surrounded by characters who think positive, creative and share constructive thoughts made me challenge myself and contribute to their great projects. Through this process, I discovered that people would listen to me. Years later, Fabian would recommend a great editor for this book.

Jens Schauder was my first mentor after I was employed. He had been kind enough to spend countless hours counseling me in my early career. Although I already gave talks in local user groups, he was the one motivating me to speak at conferences. Together with Jens, I gave my first conference talk about mentoring at the Herbstcampus in Nuremberg in 2012. Over many years, he has been invaluable for me as a person to think ideas through, ask for advice and talk about career decisions.

Writing a book is a special adventure. I prepared by reading books and listening to podcasts, drafting project plans and even brushing up on my English skills. This helped a lot. However, there are countless traps a fresh-baked book author can fall into.

Hassan Osman wrote the book "Write Your Book on The Side", which is an invaluable resource for every first-time author. Without his book and podcast, I would not have been able to develop and structure the content of this book, let alone self-publish it.

Lisa Rosenberg provided me with a beautiful cover and layout, rescuing me from a serious crisis in the late phase of the project. With dedication and energy, she not only produced many covers for the book for me to choose from, but additionally helped me on the spot with creating more graphics for another project. She's a force of nature when she focusses on a project.

Writing this book cost countless hours of my leisure time. I have always been working a lot, lining up one side project after the other. Working a fulltime job, having a house, a child and two cats, and writing a book was only possible with a supporting wife and a caring mother. That is why the last words of this book are dedicated to my wife Nadine. Thank you for having my back!
